AGOYI Eric Etchikinto
Genetic study of promiscuous nodulation in soybean

Mr. Eric Etchikinto Agoyi screened the existing soybean cultivars in Uganda for their ability to effectively form nodules with indigenous soil bacteria, ability termed as promiscuous nodulation (PN). Twelve promiscuous genotypes (PSG) were identified, all with high biological nitrogen fixation (BNF) ability. The PSGs showed various nodulation performances in various environments with few stable genotypes. The inheritance pattern of PN was documented. The study identified two putative Quantitative Trait Loci (QTLs) associated with PN traits. A better definition of “Promiscuous soybean” was also proposed, based on the observed results. This study was funded through Intra ACP SHARE Project, the Norman Borlaug LEAP, and RUFORUM through Carnegie Cooperation of New York, and was supervised by Prof. Phinehas Tukamuhabwa and Dr. John Baptist Tumuhairwe.

Molecular studies of genetic relatedness of Zambian Maize (Zea mays L.) inbred lines and the phenotypic diversity of selected lines

Mr. Richard Chanda’s research on genetic relatedness and population structure of the Zambian maize inbred lines has shed more light on the genetic diversity of local inbred lines and how they can be used to exploit diversity from exotic tropical and temperate inbreds to maximize exploitation of heterosis. The repository data generated will guide the development of a cost-effective maize hybrid breeding programme in Zambia that will strategically utilise exotic inbred lines for developing genetically enhanced climate resilient maize hybrids. This study was funded by RUFORUM, CIMMYT and USDA Norman Borlaug Fellowship, and was supervised by Prof. David. S. Osiru and Dr. Mick. S. Mwala

AKWANGO Damalie (Ms)
Determinants of an effective drought early warning system in mitigation of drought effects in Karamoja sub-region, in Uganda

Ms. Damalie Akwango investigated the determinants of an effective drought early warning system in the mitigation of recurrent drought episodes in Karamoja sub-region, which has had devastating impacts.

The study revealed that nature of... partnerships, quality and timely dissemination of information and capacity building for households to cope with drought effects were the most important factors for an effective drought early warning system. The findings of this study indicate the need to address weaknesses in partnerships, quality and timeliness of information dissemination and capacity gaps that limit households’ ability to cope with drought effect. The study was funded by National Agricultural Research Organisation (NARO) under the ATAAS Project, was and supervised by Dr. Bernard B. Obaa and Assoc. Professor Nelson Turyahabwe.

Effectiveness of video-mediated extension approach as used by Sasakawa Global 2000 to influence social learning among rice farmers in Uganda

Mr. Gabriel Karubanga assessed the benefits of a video-mediated extension approach (VMEA) as compared to the conventional face-to-face extension approach (F2FEA) among rice farmers in Kamwenge and Hoima districts respectively. Overall, VMEA was stronger in mobilization and awareness creation, fostering self-guided learning, and social interactions and networking amongst farmers while F2FEA was stronger in facilitating knowledge acquisition and retention, and knowledge application due to technical backstopping by extension workers. Thus, the strengths of VMEA and F2FEA are complementary in the processes of farmer learning and innovation. Successful integration of VMEA and F2FEA calls for rethinking of institutional arrangements, roles of the extension worker, and their pragmatic retooling to effectively utilize videos in the farmer learning processes. The study was funded by Access Agriculture; RUFORUM; DAAD and Intra-ACP SHARE mobility project, and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Kibwika Paul, Dr. Sseguya Haroon and Dr. Okry Florent.

Determinants of smallholder farmers’ resilience to rainfall variability: a case of Bududa and Manafwa districts in Mt. Elgon region, Eastern Uganda

Mr. Narisi Mubangizi’s study established the conditions that determine smallholder farmers’ resilience to rainfall variability. The study was conducted in Bududa and Manafwa districts as cases in Mt. Elgon region. The study revealed that farmers perceived shortening of rainfall seasons in line with meteorological data. Farmers only perceived negative effects of rainfall variability and no opportunities at all. Majority of farmers relied more on indigenous indicators for rainfall forecasting than the scientific climatic forecasts because they perceived the latter to be unreliable and inappropriately timed. Several resilience-building strategies exist among farmers but these are planned and implemented at individual household level yet rainfall variability is a covariate phenomenon. Thus building smallholder farmers’ resilience should employ a multi-sectorial approach to increase farmers’ productivity, livelihood asset base and off-farm options. The study was funded by NORAD through the CAPSNA Project, and supervised by Dr. Florence Kyazze and Dr. Paul Mukwaya.

NASIRUMBI Losira (Ms)

Actor interactions in the development and uptake of new hybrid banana varieties in Uganda

Ms. Losira Nasirumbi studied the dynamics in agricultural technology development and how this influences uptake of new hybrid banana varieties in Uganda. Her research demonstrates that application of the systems approach to technology development requires a dynamic process that supports involvement of diverse actors. However, close attention to context is important in dealing with issues of power asymmetries and determining to what extent various actors engage in the process. Her work advances knowledge on effects and value of networks in research and development processes, and nuancing power relations accompanying network of actors. The study suggests an inclusive Multi-Dimensional Integrated Model to help address the shortcomings and promote generation of technologies with enhanced potential for uptake thereby increasing agricultural productivity and contribute to agricultural transformation. This study was funded by World Bank through the ATAAS project implemented by NARO, and was supervised by Dr. Florence Birungi Kyazze and Dr. Haroon Sseguya.

Determinants of postharvest losses in rice among smallholder farmers in eastern Uganda

Mr. Godfrey Lusiba Ssebaggala’s study aimed at contributing to the efforts to reduce Postharvest Losses (PHLs) through establishing the underlying conditions that constrain farmer innovations to reduce PHLs in Eastern Uganda. Results indicate that gender division of labor in rice processes depends on labor intensity and cultural values.
Farmers perceive 66% of the losses to occur at the stages of harvesting and threshing through spillage. Farmers’ perceived ability to reduce PHLs was lowest at stages with highest losses, calling for a mindset change. Farmers’ inability to use PHL reduction technologies is due to lack of skills, high cost or a mismatch to farmers’ context. Thus, increased food and income security at household level requires addressing gender disparities, sensitization about PHL reduction technologies that fit the socio-economic and technical context. The study was self-funded with support from RUFORUM, and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Kibwika Paul and Dr. Kyazze Florence Birungi.

AYINE Robert

Food self-sufficiency approach to refugee self-reliance in Uganda: a case study of Kyangwali Refugee Settlement in Hoima District, Uganda

Mr. Robert Ayine studied food self-sufficiency to understand refugee self-reliance in Kyangwali Refugee Settlement. The Self-reliance Strategy was introduced to empower the refugees to meet their own needs, especially the aspect of refugee households producing their own food. The study established that Kyangwali Settlement is by far arable, however food self-sufficiency was constrained by reduction in crop output, negative attitudes towards self-reliance, distraction from third country resettlement option and the dearth of alternative livelihoods. These challenges constrained agricultural production and inhibited the achievement of self-reliance. The study recommended that for holistic refugee self-reliance, the focus should not exclusively be on food but rather a comprehensive socioeconomic empowerment, focusing on improving crop production levels and exploring non-agricultural livelihood options. This study was funded by Mak-Sida research collaboration phase 3 and was supervised by Assoc. Prof Fredrick R. Tumwine and Assoc. Prof Robert Kabumbuli.

BOMUHANGI Allan

Gender, decision making for adaptation to climate change in the Mt. Elgon region

Mr. Allan Bomuhangi’s study focused on understanding how women and men experience and respond to climate change in the Mt Elgon region. His research demonstrated that men and women’s perceptions of the changes in climate are gendered and localized. His findings also suggested that while men and women may be exposed to similar climatic changes/shocks/impacts, their experience of vulnerability differ. Vulnerability to changes in climate is a contested, contextual and gendered concept with gender roles resulting into different adaptation pathways and decision-making processes within households. Allan’s research provides valuable insights into the adaptation process within households that is needed if policy and practice are to respond to men and women’s needs in specific contexts. This study was funded by Center for International Forestry Research (CIFOR), The Norman E. Borlaug Leadership Enhancement in Agriculture Fellowship and Makerere University; and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Gorettie N. Nabanoga and Dr. Justine J. Namaalwa.

Critical soil organic carbon range for optimal maize response to nitrogen in a Ferralsol

Mr. Patrick Musinguzi’s research focused on investigating how Soil Organic Carbon (SOC) contributes to farmers’ knowledge in improving efficiency in the application of mineral fertilizers for high returns. Results showed that soils containing moderate amount of SOC (19-22 gram per Kilogram of soil) are critical for increased nutrient uptake and highest yields. Soils with too little or too much SOC do not result in significant responses to added fertilizer. Soils with critical amount of SOC proved vital in fertilizer management - making this a novel finding to the body of scientific knowledge. Enhancing farmers’ knowledge in soil testing is recommended to guide them target soils with critical SOC amount for highest maize yield response to added fertilizer. The research was funded by World Phosphate Institute, Carnegie Cooperation of New York and IWMNET-EU project and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. John Stephen Tenywa and Dr. Peter Ebanyat.

Contribution of Kilembe copper mine and tailing sites to trace element concentrations in soils, water, forages, foods and humans

Mr. Rutabatinya Abraham Mwesigye studied the contribution of Kilembe copper mine to heavy metal concentrations in soils, water, forages, foods and humans. The findings indicated that soils are highly contaminated with mine metals, which are absorbed by food crops and forages. Some of the foods produced are not suitable for human consumption because they contain high levels of copper. Some of the waters in Kilembe were not suitable for human consumption due to high levels of Iron, Aluminum, Manganese and Cobalt. Kilembe residents were found to have high concentration of Copper, Nickel and Cobalt in their bodies and children were more vulnerable. Kilembe mine is a case example where enforcement of National Environment (waste management) regulations has failed, putting to risk ecosystems and human health. This study was funded by Carnegie Corporation New York, and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Majaliwa Gilbert and Dr. Tumwebaze Susan.

RNA interference and coat protein derived resistance to cassava brown streak viruses

Mr. Wagaba Henry investigated the use of genomic sequences from the viruses that cause cassava brown streak disease (CBSD), to induce resistance against the disease using genetic engineering. Sequences obtained from the coat protein gene of the virus were found to be the most effective in producing resistance against CBSD. These findings are a major milestone towards obtaining resistance against CBSD in local cassava varieties in Uganda. This study was supported by the Virus Resistant Cassava for Africa Project, funded by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation (BMGF), and United States Agency for International Development (USAID), and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Settumba Mukasa and Dr. Yona Buguma.

Application of the technological pedagogical content knowledge framework on the use of ICT in pedagogy by teachers of mathematical/quantitative disciplines universities in Uganda

Ms. Marjorie Sarah Kabuye Batiibwe studied the extent to which knowledge predicted the use of ICT in pedagogy (UIP) by teachers in universities. She conceptualised knowledge according to the TPACK framework as having seven constructs. The constructs were content knowledge (CK); pedagogical knowledge (PK); technological knowledge (TK); pedagogical content knowledge (PCK); technological pedagogical knowledge (TPK); technological content knowledge (TCK) and technological pedagogical content knowledge (TPACK). Using the positivist approach, she found that in order to effectively engage in UIP, teachers needed TPACK in its entirety and not its individual constituents. She thus recommended that when training teachers for UIP, the respective stakeholders in universities should ensure that the training is wholesome on TPACK. This study was self-funded and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Fred E K Bakkabulindi and Assoc. Prof. John M Mango.

Relevance, integration and efficacy of the teaching of social studies in primary schools in Eastern Uganda

Mr. Fred Kasiisa’s study arose out of observation about the falling of expectations for quality delivery of social studies (SST) in Eastern Uganda and probably Countrywide. Using the Constructivist theory, the study found that to a large extent, SST is relevant to the pupils’ academic needs. However, both the curriculum and approach are not fully integrated, as the teachers are reluctant to inter-link the subject-content as well as embrace the constructivist approach of teaching SST. Therefore there is need to cause a change or revision of the current subject-content drawing attention to the African religion and cultural values in reflection of SST goals. This study was funded by Statehouse, and was supervised by Dr. Morris Bakaluba Tamale and Prof. Mugagga Anthony Muwagga.

Tutors’ knowledge base and the preparation of pre-service visual arts teachers in Uganda: a case of three selected National Teachers’ Colleges

Mr. Julius Ssegantebuka investigated tutors’ knowledge and skills use during the preparation of pre-service visual arts teachers in National Teachers’ Colleges in Uganda. Results showed that tutors had limited knowledge in theory, pottery, sculpture and graphic design. However, tutors exhibited desired knowledge in drawing, painting and textile decoration, but there were limitations in its implementation. The contextual limitations included: inadequate teaching space, teaching resources, congested art-curriculum, and educational policies. Personal limitations included: tutors’ college training and qualifications, limited content knowledge, and professional development. He recommended refresher courses for tutors, provisional of adequate teaching space, teaching resources, reviewing of the art-curriculum and educational policies. His findings contribute to the understanding of tutors’ knowledge and skills in the pedagogy of visual arts and address the limiting contextual and personal constraints. This study was funded by Sida-Makerere Research Corporation, and supervised by Dr. Tamale M.B. and Assoc. Prof. Muwagga Mugagga Anthony.

Management and the quality of teaching in public Universities in Uganda: a study of Kyambogo University

Ms. Ezati Luija Marie Azikuru studied the influence of management on the quality of teaching in public universities, using data collected from Kyambogo University. The study found that planning, organizing, staffing, and controlling, influenced the quality of teaching in public universities; but coordinating did not. The study recommended that government should increase financial and knowledge resourcing to enhance performance of the university managers, and should allow the managers sufficient freedom to practice their expertise on planning and implementation with a focus on student and staff development to maximize quality of teaching. This study was self-funded, and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Betty A. Ezati, and Dr David Onen.

Management and quality assurance in National Teachers’ Colleges in Uganda

Ms. Josephine Lubwama investigated the influence of management on quality assurance in National Teachers Colleges (NTCs) in Uganda, which arose as a result... of the persistent complaints from key stakeholders about the deteriorating quality of teacher trainees from these institutions. The findings revealed that planning, controlling, and directing have significant influence on quality assurance, while organizing was not. In addition, the study discovered that NTCs have weak quality assurance systems. Therefore, it was recommended that managers of NTCs undertake periodic audits and reviews of their institutions in order to guarantee the quality of their processes and products. Besides, they should also benchmark and adapt best practices of assuring quality from other institutions of higher education. The study was self-sponsored, and was supervised by: Dr. David Onen and Dr. Edris Serugo Kasene.

Success factors for women in leadership positions in universities in Uganda

Ms. Florence Nakamanya’s study explored the success factors for women in leadership positions in universities in Uganda. Florence’s study ascertained the institutional and personal factors for the success of women who had broken the glass ceiling to occupy senior and middle level leadership positions. From the study’s findings, three themes including identity, support, and capacity building emerged as critical to the success of women in leadership positions in universities in Uganda. This study concluded that institutional factors (policies, support from senior management, networking, role of mentors, role models, and capacity development) and personal factors (personality, experience, education, background, and family support) greatly contributed to the success of women in senior and middle leadership positions in Ugandan universities.

This study was privately funded and was supervised by Dr. Ronald Bisaso and Dr. Joseph Kimoga.

Management of public universities during times of significant transformation: a case of Kyambogo University in Uganda

Ms. Gertrude Namubiru investigated how management was exercised at Kyambogo University during its formation that involved the merger of three tertiary institutions and the period immediately thereafter. The study revealed that planning and decision-making processes were consultative in nature, but were not adequately participative and involving. Secondly, the University leadership lacked a shared vision and common strategies for managing transformation, besides being non-collegial and heavily bureaucratic in nature. To improve the management of mergers it was recommended that; the University managers should adapt an organic organizational structure that calls for teamwork, participative - decentralized decision-making, and planning. They should often develop a shared vision, employ a collegial leadership, and be supportive to all units. The study was self-sponsored and supervised by Assoc. Prof. Joseph Oonyu and Dr. David Onen.

Head teachers’ styles of leadership and teacher supervision in public primary schools in mid-western Uganda

Ms. Kate Norah Tibagwa investigated the relationship between head teachers’ styles of leadership and the supervision of primary school teachers in mid-western Uganda, aimed at validating the belief that school heads can make a difference in instructional effectiveness through effective leadership and supervision. Using a correlational survey design, the study revealed that four out of the five leadership styles studied, namely: bureaucratic, people-oriented, task-oriented, and transformational styles significantly related with teacher supervision, unlike laissez-faire style. Urban teachers were found to be receiving proportionately more supervision than their rural counterparts. Therefore, some leadership styles enhance teacher supervision more than others; therefore, head teachers should be trained to enable them choose from the array of leadership styles that can competitively enhance teacher supervision and instructional effectiveness. The study was self-funded and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Joseph Oonyu and Dr. David Onen.
The study concluded that certain HRM practices were more critical in enhancing job satisfaction than others. Efforts to improve quality at the university should focus on these practices. The study was funded by Sida-Makerere bilateral research corporation and was supervised by Prof. J.C.S. Musaazi.

Insecticidal potency of the essential oil and structure elucidation of the bioactive compounds from Tagetes minuta

Ms. Christine Kyarimpaa investigated the efficacy of essential oil and solvent extracts from Tagetes minuta (Marigold) as potent insecticides against mosquito larvae. Results from the essential oil revealed five major compounds. The larvicidal assay results suggest that T. minuta essential oil is an effective larvicide. Phytochemical investigation on the solvent extracts yielded several pure compounds belonging to different classes thereby accounting for the vast traditional use of T. minuta. The pure compounds have been studied further for their anti-cancer, antioxidant and anti-plasmodial properties and have proved effective. Essential oil from Tagetes minuta should be developed further into an insecticide for commercial purposes after ascertaining its toxicity. This study was funded by Belgian Technical Co-operation, RISE-AFNET, and Kyambogo University and was supervised by Prof. Isaiah Omolo Ndiege and Dr. John Wasswa.

Oxidative stress in experimentally induced liver cirrhosis and the protective role of antioxidant vitamins in rats

Mr. Samuel Wamutu investigated the prophylactic and therapeutic effects of antioxidant vitamins C, E and β-carotene on an experimental model of toxic liver disease. Vitamins C, E separately or combined prevented the extent of liver disease caused by carbon tetrachloride in rats. β-carotene (pro-vitamin A), applied separately or in combination with vitamin C led to less conclusive results, as marked fatty deposits in the liver were noted. Biomarkers of oxidative stress were markedly improved by adding the vitamins. These findings provide prospects of some natural antioxidant vitamins in the prevention and/or cure of chronic liver damage in humans. This work was funded by Makerere University Staff Development (I@mak.com), the Belgian Technical Cooperation (BTC), the Flemish Interuniversity Council (VLIR/OUS) and the University of Antwerp, Belgium. The work was supervised by the late Prof. Gabriel S. Bimenya, Dr. Joseph F. Hawumba and Prof. Peter P. Michielsen.

BUNALEMA Lydia (Ms)

Anti-mycobacterial activity and phytochemical analysis of some plants used in Uganda

Ms. Lydia Bunalema investigated the anti-mycobacterial activity and phytochemistry of some medicinal plants used in Uganda for alternative treatment of Tuberculosis. Efforts to combat TB have met challenges resulting from development of drug resistant strains, which are difficult to treat. This study provides TB therapies from readily available medicinal plants that can improve health. Three acridone alkaloids, two pentacyclic triterpenoids and one flavonol were isolated and elucidated from two plant species. These compounds were active on both drug resistant and susceptible TB strains; with some of the compounds showing higher activity than the current drugs; implying that there is potential for these compounds to be developed into new effective anti TB drugs. The study was funded by the Carnegie Cooperation and RISE-AFNNET, and was supervised by Prof. Paul Waako and Prof. John Tabuti.

KADDUMUKASA Mark

Humoral immune responses and immunological memory against plasmodium falciparum malaria vaccine antigens

Dr. Mark Kaddumukasa’s study was purposed to investigate the development of immunity to malaria and malaria disease indicators among people with uncomplicated malaria. Understanding the way immunity develops is required to guide the development of a malaria vaccine. The study found that malaria still remains a serious health problem among children aged less than five years with low bed net usage in Iganga District, eastern Uganda. Overall, immunity against malaria infection increased among the participants, though HIV co-infected participants carried more malaria gametocytes (sexual forms). The findings benefit the development of malaria vaccines and support policy at the Ministry of Health to re-enforce malaria prevention guidelines especially among the HIV co-infected patients. This study was funded by Sida-Makerere bilateral research cooperation – phase 2, and was supervised by Prof. Fred Kironde, Prof. Elly Katafira and Mats Wahlgren.

LUGAAJJU Allan

Memory B-Cell function and antibody profiles in malaria: their role in protection against disease in infancy

Dr. Lugaaaju Allan studied time-dependent development of antibody protection against malaria during the first year of life in infants from villages around Kasangati Health Center. A new method for detecting blood proteins (antibodies) and white blood cells that help defend humans against malaria was developed. Parallel examination of blood from infants and their mothers showed persistently higher levels of malaria-specific antibodies and malaria-reactive white blood cells in mothers than the infants. This confirms earlier findings that malaria natural protection depends on how long one has been exposed to the malaria parasites. The study also established that, in infant blood during the first year of life, levels of the diverse antibody-producing white blood cells do not increase uniformly. These findings provide clues towards the design of effective malaria vaccines. This research was funded by Sida-Makerere bilateral research cooperation phase 3, and supervised by Prof. Fred Kironde and Prof. Kristina Persson.

MUNABI Ian Guyton Kwadu

Assessment of maternal pelvis height as a tool to identify mothers with potential adverse parturition outcomes among Ugandan women

Dr. Ian Guyton Kwadu Munabi’s study assessed the use of the mothers’ pelvis height as an aid in screening for adverse obstructive childbirth outcomes in Uganda mothers. His study revealed that pelvis height had associations with the internal diameters of the mother’s birth canal and antenatal foetal head descent. Pelvis height also had an association with foetal head moulding during childbirth. When used in combination with maternal height and maternal weight, the maternal pelvis height improved the identification of mothers with adverse childbirth obstructive outcomes of pregnancy. The study highlights the potential use of the mothers’ pelvis height as an aid for reducing childbirth related injury and death in our low resource settings. This study was funded in part by Carnegie Corporation of New York and Makerere University, and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Samuel Abimelech Luboga and Assoc. Prof. Florence Mirembe.

NAKUBULWA Sarah (Ms)

Herpes Simplex Virus Type 2 (genital-herpes) in pregnancy in Uganda: burden for premature rupture of membranes (PROM), sero-conversion and effect of acyclovir on adverse outcomes

Dr. Nakubulwa Sarah investigated genital-herpes in pregnancy: risk for PROM, seroconversion and effect of acyclovir (anti-herpetic-drug) on undesirable pregnancy-outcomes in Mulago Hospital. Genital-herpes was a risk factor for PROM. Herpetic sero-conversion was high (7.9%) in pregnancy. Multiple sexual partners and HIV positive-status increased risk of seroconversion. Acyclovir use in herpes-positive pregnant women from 28-36 weeks reduced preterm-delivery incidence although did not reduce PROM-incidence. This study supports reduction of genital-herpes to reduce PROM, concerted interventions to reduce genital-herpes acquisition during pregnancy and administration of acyclovir to herpes-positive pregnant women to prevent preterm-delivery. This study was funded by MEPI/MESAU and CARTA Fellowships and was supervised by Associate Professors: Dan Kaye, Florence Mirembe and Nazarius Mbona-Tumwesigye.

NALUGO Scovia Mbalinda (Mrs)
Reproductive health and health related quality of life among perinatally HIV-infected (PHIA) in Uganda

Dr. Nalugo Scovia Mbalinda investigated reproductive health and health related quality of life among PHIA namely: multiple partners of unknown HIV status, and inconsistent condom use. Being on ART was associated with better physical and mental health. Having pregnancy intentions was associated with better mental health. Lack of communication with guardians on sexuality and dissatisfaction with SRH services was associated with poor mental health. Most adolescents were dissatisfied with SRH services provided by the clinics. SRH clinics provided adult and pediatric care with no adolescent-specific services. It’s recommended that adolescents are given appropriate SRH services to meet their needs. Research funders: OGAC, NIH, HRSA, MEPI-MESAU, CARTA and was supervised by Prof.: Kaye K. Dan, Prof. Noah Kiwanuka and Prof. Lars Erickson.

OBUKU Andrew Ekii
Immune responses in HIV/S. mansoni coinfected Ugandans

Mr. Obuku Andrew Ekii investigated the immune responses in Ugandans infected with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and bilharzia. The study was shaped by the need to understand the phenotype of the predominant cells in people coinfected with two pathogens that induce mutually exclusive immune responses. The study demonstrated that HIV specific immune responses were higher in primary HIV infection and lower in chronic HIV infection. The study also showed that the lower HIV specific responses among the chronic HIV infection were not associated with frequency of immunoregulatory or ‘exhausted’ cells. This study was funded by European Commission through IDEA consortium, UK Medical Research Council/UK Department for International Development under MRC/DFID concordant agreement, Centre Hospitalier Universitaire Vaudois and Euroacc Foundation. Prof. Moses Joloba, Prof. Alison Elliott and Dr. Pietro Pala supervised the study.

Conferment of the DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY (MEDICINE)

OKWERA Alphonse
Pneumocystis jirovecii and bacterial co-morbidities in smear negative presumptive recurrent pulmonary tuberculosis in HIV-infected adults, Kampala Uganda

Dr. Alphonse Okwera studied Pneumocystis jirovecii (fungus/mold) and bacterial pathogens in presumptive recurrent pulmonary TB in HIV-infected adults in Kampala. Only few participants had M. tuberculosis, however, a high number of participants were diagnosed (found) with bacteria and P. jirovecii. Women had higher CD4 counts than men. Policy: Smear negative presumptive pulmonary TB patients should be investigated for P. jirovecii and bacteria and could provide a paradigm shift from WHO current recommendation of initial two weeks antibiotic therapy. This study was funded by National Institute of Health, US and Joint Clinical Research Centre (JCRC), and was supervised by Prof. Moses Joloba, Prof. Christopher Whalen and Assoc. Prof. David Guwatudde.

SEKIKUBO Musa
Urinary tract infections in pregnancy – studies in vivo and in vitro

Dr. Sekikubo Musa investigated urinary tract infections in pregnancy whose symptoms are partly manifested as normal changes of pregnancy. With limited laboratory support to make an accurate diagnosis, antibiotics are commonly dispensed. His findings included a high burden of antibiotic resistance of the organisms that cause urinary tract infections during pregnancy and 96% of pregnant women with symptoms of urinary tract infections take antibiotics when they don’t have the disease. His studies therefore call for laboratory diagnosis of urinary tract infections during pregnancy to avoid antibiotic misuse and limit drug resistance. This study was funded by Sida-Makerere University bilateral research collaboration, and was supervised by Prof. Florence Mirembe, Prof. Fred Kironde and Prof Annelie Brauner.

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

DACHUNG, Pam Luka

Epidemiology and molecular characterization of African swine fever in some selected states of Nigeria

Mr Pam Luka Dachung studied the distribution and genetic diversity of circulating African swine fever (ASF) viruses in pig producing states of Nigeria. His research revealed that ASF is widely distributed in the country and for the first time also demonstrated that pigs were exposed to Ornithodoros moubata tick complex salivary antigen. His study further established that genotype 1 remains the only one circulating in the country. However, the emergence of four variants (tetramers) with the fifth becoming more widely distributed and replacing those previously reported in the country were recovered from the same genotype. These findings enhance our understanding of the epidemiology and genetic diversity of the circulating ASF viruses in Nigeria. This study was jointly funded by International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and National Veterinary Research Institute (NVRI), Vom, and supervised by Prof. Joseph Erume, Assoc. Prof. Frank N. Mwline, Dr. David Shamaki and Dr. Bitrus Yakubu.

KATEREGGA Ndawula John

Adjuvants, congopain, humoral immune response, African animal trypanosomosis

Dr. John Ndawula Kateregga investigated effects of different conventional and molecular adjuvants on the humoral immune response to congopain, an enzyme from nagana disease causing agent, Trypanosoma congolense, which plays roles in the disease process. He established that purified saponins enable the induction of a strong, sustained antibody response against congopain in cattle. This antibody response is partially protective, due to anti-congopain antibodies produced by the immunized animals, which inhibit congopain activity. He demonstrated that congopain could be utilized in the design of an anti-nagana disease vaccine and identified the most suitable adjuvant to enhance immune response to the antigen. This will make it possible to conduct vaccine trials in development of an anti-disease vaccine against African animal trypanosomosis in future. This study was funded by the European Union and the Carnegie Corporation of New York, and was supervised by Prof. George W Lubega and Prof. Alain FV Boulangé.

MAYANJA Maureen Nanziri (Ms)

Food insecurity amidst climate variability in rangeland ecosystems: a case of pastoral and agropastoral communities in Nakasongola and Nakaseke Districts of Uganda

Dr. Maureen Nanziri Mayanja’s study of transhuman pastoralists in the central cattle corridor of Uganda, focusing on exposure and sensitivity to changes in climate variation and failure of adaptive and coping mechanisms as some of the factors that contribute to household food insecurity. The research establishes prevalence of food insecurity to be in three dimensions – the mild, moderate and extremely food insecure households. The research argues that heterogeneous livelihood clusters within what are usually considered homogenous pastoralist and agropastoralist communities denote different types of adaptive capacity. This underscores the need for differential interventions within the same community to better support adaptation to climatic effects and manages food insecurity. This research was funded by Carnegie Corporation, Africa Innovation Institute, Commonwealth Scholarship Commission and Makerere University; and was supervised by Prof. Rubaire Akiki, Prof. John Morton, and Prof John David Kabasa.

SENHTE Celsus

Acanthamoeba and other pathogenic free-living amoebae found in natural and domestic water sources in Queen Elizabeth Protected Area and Kampala, Uganda

Dr. Celsus Senhrete researched on the occurrence, diversity and distribution of disease causing free-living amoebae in natural and domestic water from Queen Elizabeth Protected Area (QEPA) and Kampala. His study is the first to bridge the gap of awareness and the magnitude of disease causing free-living amoebae as water contaminants in Uganda’s public water supply systems. His study revealed the presence of specific disease-causing species of free-living amoebae for the first time in Uganda. The findings highlight the need to encourage enhancement of programs to avail portable water to all communities to avoid waterborne diseases. This study was funded by the sub-Saharan African Water Research Network (SSAWRN) and the CARNEGIE-Next Generation of African Academics (NGAA II); and was supervised by Prof. Michael Ocaido, Prof. Joseph Erume, Dr Irene Naigaga and Mr. Karl Tiller.

Fish hazards and the risks associated with fish consumption in the Lake Albert region; guidelines for Mercury and Lead

Dr. Andrew Tamale established the sociocultural factors, Lead and Mercury levels in fish from Lake Albert, and the health risks for... vulnerable groups in Hoima district, through key informant interviews, structured survey and laboratory analyses. Fish Mercury and Lead levels were higher than Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO) and World Health Organization (WHO) guidelines. A non-carcinogenic health risk (Hazard quotient=2.05) for the vulnerable groups (children less than 17 years, pregnant mothers and women of child bearing age) was established in Lake Albert. The study set up a fish consumption advisory for Lead and Mercury in Lake Albert. This study was funded by Consortium for Advanced Research Training in Africa (CARTA), Water Network of RIISE Carnegie of New York, International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and Makerere University; and was supervised by Prof Francis Ejobi, Prof. Muyanja Charles and Dr. Naigaga Irene.

AGABA Joab Ezra

Improving reusability in instructional design: adaptation of learning objects with multi-format assets

Mr Joab Ezra Agaba investigated how to improve reusability in instructional design through adaptation of reusable learning objects with multi-format assets in higher education in e-learning environments. The study revealed design issues that hinder reusability of learning objects and how to address them in instructional design. The study also formulated a new metadata structure for higher education learning objects with multi-format assets. Among the key outputs of this research is a software called loadaptor, which instructional designers in higher education institutions can now flexibly use to create instructional content by reusing existing instructional materials from other online repositories. The results of using this software show that reusability of learning objects with multi-format assets can be improved through adaptation of existing learning objects. This research was funded by the German Government through DAAD program and was supervised by Prof. Jude T. Lubega.

The Principal, Makerere University Business School to present the following for the Conferment of the

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY
BYUKUSENGE Eugenie (Ms)

Business performance of Small and Medium Enterprises in Rwanda

Ms. Eugenie Byukusenge examined how knowledge management, managerial competencies and innovation can improve business performance of Small and Medium Enterprises in Rwanda. Findings reveal that knowledge management stimulates innovation for better business performance. Equally, managerial competencies enhance business performance. Broadly, business owners of SMEs should pay keen interest in managing effectively and efficiently their available knowledge resources and involve themselves in continuous capacity building to enhance their managerial competencies for better management of their businesses. This study was funded by University of Rwanda-Sida and supervised by Prof. John C. Munene and Assoc. Prof. Laura Orobia.

DAKUNG Reuel Johnmark

Entrepreneurial action among the disabled students in the Nigerian tertiary institutions

Mr. Reuel Johnmark Dakung investigated the factors associated with entrepreneurial action among disabled students in the Nigerian tertiary institutions. The study established that inclusion, entrepreneurship education (pedagogy), action mechanisms in terms of knowledge and intention and personal initiative (resilience) are important factors that influence entrepreneurial action. Just like the gender activities being captured everywhere across the world (politics, business, education and sports), government and policy creators should consider coming up with a policy on entrepreneurship education that include the disabled in Nigeria. The study was funded by Tertiary Trust Fund (TETFund), Nigeria, and was supervised by Prof. John, C. Munene and Prof. Waswa Balunywa.

KIBIRANGO Moses Mpiima

Intrapreneurial behavior among university employees: The role of generative influence, positive deviance, informational differences and novelty ecosystems in Uganda

Mr. Kibirango Moses Mpiima studied the determinants of intrapreneurial behaviour among university employees in Uganda. This study was done by examining the integration of positive deviance assumed by Entrepreneurship Theory with the constructs assumed by Complexity Systems Leadership Theory. These were generative influence, informational differences and experimentation eagerness. With an understanding of intrapreneurial behavior reality, employees at all levels would be able to design and support idea generation through experimentation with learning in mind and adaptability readiness. These would be able to prepare for flexibility and consequently enable new venture co-creation and co-evolution. The study was co-funded by Bugema University and self-sponsorship. This study was supervised by Professor John C. Munene, Professor Waswa Balunywa and Professor Peter Rosa.

DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY
NALUKENGE Irene (Ms)

Compliance with international financial reporting standards among MFIs in Uganda

Ms. Irene Nalukenge investigated how Micro Finance Institutions (MFIs) in Uganda can improve on compliance with International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRSs). Based on MFIs that had indicated the use of IFRSs in their audited financial reports, the study established that MFIs should put more emphasis on improving controls over financial reporting if quality financial reports are to be realized. Further, corporate governance and the practice of ethical virtues enhance the effectiveness of controls over financial reporting which in turn is associated with presentation of financial reports according to IFRS requirements. This study was was funded by Makerere University Business School, and was supervised by Assoc Prof Stephen Nkundabanyanga and Prof. Joseph Ntayi.

NSEREKO Isa

Social entrepreneurial venture creation in Uganda

Mr. Isa Nseroko investigated the factors associated with social entrepreneurial venture creation in Uganda. The study established that self-confidence, resourcefulness (personal initiative), behavioral mechanisms like action planning and intention and conditional resources (social support) are important factors that influence social entrepreneurial venture creation. Policy creators need to provide sustainable finance through providing supportive systems like technical, machinery and hands-on training to addresses the social problems. This study was funded by Africa Development Bank and Makerere University Business School, and was supervised by Prof. Waswa Balunywa and Prof. J.C. Munene.
Conferement of the DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

NYAHAS Samson Iliya

Voluntary disclosure practices of listed firms in Nigeria

Mr. Samson Iliya Nyahas examined factors associated with voluntary disclosure practices of listed firms in Nigeria. It was found that stakeholders attribute of power and urgency are positively associated with voluntary disclosure. Provision of guidelines by government agencies as well as professional and industrial networks promote voluntary disclosure practices. Policy makers need to poveid clear disclosure guidelines that meet the needs of all stakeholders not just the shareholders alone. The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Nigeria should set up policies that will encourage members towards disclosure of social, ethical and environmental information in annual reports through reward systems. The study was funded African Development Bank and Makerere University Business School, and was supervised by Prof. Samuel Seijaaka, Assoc. Prof. Edward Bbaale and Assoc. Prof. Nixon Kamukama.

TUMWINE Sulait

Cost of credit in emerging markets; a study of banking financial institutions in Uganda

Mr. Sulait Tumwine investigated the determinants of cost of credit in emerging market, focusing on banking financial institutions in Uganda. The study established that liquidity, equity capital, market power and reserve requirement have a positive effect on the cost of credit while operational efficiency, lending out ratio, concentration, public sector borrowing and private sector credit have a negative effect on the determination of cost of credit. Bank managers need to take interest in equity mobilization because it is reliable and cheap source of funding bank operations, emphasize efficiency operations to reduce cost of doing business. Growth of small and medium banks, use of public sector borrowing in efficient ways should be promoted to improve economic growth. The study was funded African Development Bank and Makerere University Business School, and was supervised by Prof. Samuel Seijaaka, Assoc. Prof. Edward Bbaale and Assoc. Prof. Nixon Kamukama.

The study was funded by the Federal Government of Nigeria through the Tertiary Education Trust Fund and was supervised by Prof. John C. Munene; Assoc. Professor Nixon Kamakama and Prof. Joseph M. Ntayi.

BAKAMWESIGA Hilary

Vulnerability of concrete bridges to environmental conditions in Uganda: a study of condition states, potential risks and management strategies of highway bridges

Mr. Hilary Bakamwesiga’s research aimed at establishing the causes of the increased frequency of bridge failures and enhancing their durability and safety. The findings revealed that bridge failures in Uganda are mainly attributed to inappropriate or/and irregular maintenance, age, overload, and extreme weather events such as flooding. An estimate of flood risk to highway bridges revealed that changes in climate trends will influence the flow volume in rivers, increase risk of flooding and lead to subsequent failure of bridges. Basing on observed and potential threats, the study produced a methodology for prioritizing bridge maintenance. The research pre-empts a strategic decision mechanism towards flood risk analysis to help bridge designers make informed decisions and the development of an appropriate computerized Bridge Management System for effective and efficient bridge management. The study was funded by Sida-Makerere bilateral research corporation and supervised by Prof. Jackson A. Mwakali and Prof. Sven Thelandersson.

Enhancing the performance and life span of pit latrines: processes and implications

Ms. Nakagiri Anne’s research aimed at reducing filling, smell and insects nuisances of pit latrines, so as to prolong their useful life and improve sanitation access, within urban slums of Kampala-Uganda. Her research found that brick structures and minimizing cleaning times could reduce filling; while cleanliness, stance length and the super structure material affected the smell of pit latrines. Inappropriate structures increased insect nuisances while having a vent didn’t improve smell or flies in pit latrines. Improving the pit environment through addition of indigenous microorganisms reduced ammonia, smell and insect nuisances during the degradation of faecal matter and pit latrine use. These findings are guides for development of standards; construction; supervision; use; regular maintenance and recommending the use of the microorganisms in pit latrines. This study was funded by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, and supervised by Prof. Frank Kansiime, Assoc. Prof. Niwagaba, Dr. Kulabako and Dr. Tumuhairwe.

SEMIYAGA Swaib

Dewatering as a critical step in urban slum-based faecal sludge management

Mr. Semiya Swaib’s research aimed at improving water separation from faecal sludge emptied from lined and unlined pit latrines in slum areas inaccessible to vacuum emptying trucks. The findings revealed that the faecal sludge from lined pits had lower ability to release water compared to that from unlined pits. Application of sawdust and charcoal dust as commonly available physical conditioners improved the water removal ability of faecal sludge from lined pit latrines, enhancing the reusability potential in terms of energy recovery. The characteristics of faecal sludge from lined pits rendered centrifugation an appropriate compact technology for faecal sludge separation. The study suggests promotion of emptying technologies that preserve original faecal sludge characteristics accompanied with awareness raising against solid waste disposal in pits. This study was funded by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and supervised by Prof. Frank Kansiime, Assoc. Prof. Charles B. Niwagaba and Assoc. Prof. Mackay A.E. Okure.

Product meaning creation: comprehending the processes of user value creation based on selected local beverage products

Mr. Sserunjogi studied the design process of product meaning and identity construction, wrought through the function and symbolic values wrapped as product labels, to improve the value of local beverage products through design. The findings advocate for a theoretical framework towards improving local product’s economic and socio-cultural benefits that nurtures a mix of global standards and traditionalisms in product development. The findings suggest the adoption of glocalization process (‘think local act global’) as the route for improving local products visibility and identity. If the Uganda Government policy to value addition does not give design due attention in the value addition to mediate the process of product meaning and identity construction, local products will continue to be rated as low-quality products on local and international markets. This study was funded by Carnegie Corporation of New York and Makerere University, and was supervised by Prof. Mugendi K. M’Rithaa and Prof. Kwaresiga Philip.

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

AKOL Godfrey Okot

Organizational environment and stakeholder satisfaction with UPE program implementation

Mr. Godfrey Okot Akol’s study assessed universal primary education (UPE) program implementation from the phenomenological viewpoint by establishing stakeholders’ (pupils’ parents’ and teachers’) satisfaction with it, as a factor of organizational environment. The findings revealed that school environment directly influenced stakeholders’ satisfaction with UPE implementation, with stakeholders from rural and Northern Region being more dissatisfied than those from urban and Central Region. The study adduces evidence for justification and guidance of UPE review to enhance stakeholder satisfaction with its implementation basing on school environmental concerns. UPE implementation and review should be informed by knowledge of stakeholders’ experience and interests emanating from internal and external school environments, which determine the stakeholders’ approval of Reliability, Assurance, Tangibles, Empathy and Responsiveness of the UPE implementation process activities. This study was self-sponsored and was supervised by Prof. P.K. Baguma and Assoc. Prof. J.C. Enon.

EZAMA Ruffino

Hermeneutic phenomenological investigation of the Christianity-Lugbara culture dialectic

Fr Ruffino Ezama observed that the Lugbara of Uganda had their own belief system, as expressed by their culture and religion lived within clans where they considered themselves natives (SURU ‘BA). Christianity brought a different (NDU) belief tied to the Person of Jesus Christ. Principally, non-Lugbara are strangers (Juru). Jesus Christ is a non-Lugbara, a stranger, an inverted being. He investigated how a stranger (JURU) can become a Lugbara native (SURU ‘BA), analyzed from a hermeneutic phenomenological perspective. His findings include: A Juru needs a clan to become a Suru ‘ba; empathy (Adu) is the meeting point of a Juru and Suru ‘ba; and dialogue between Christianity and Lugbara Culture is paramount for harmony. These findings guides on how to be inclusive in a world that tends to divide. This study was funded by Comboni Missionaries and friends, and was supervised by Dr. Ferdinand Mutaaawe Kasozi and Dr Wilfred Lajul.

Returning home: gender and choice among Internally Displaced Persons in Gulu District

Mr. Ronald Sebba Kalyango’s research explored the gendered processes, which influence the decision to return home for Internally Displaced Persons in Gulu district.
Particularly, how gender relations between women and men influence the decision to return or not. Findings show that gender relations influenced whether or not, when, how and where Displaced Persons returned to. Return to pre-conflict homes is never a linear movement from place of displacement to original home but a cyclical one mediated by social-cultural processes. Policies that neglect gender issues in the return process fail to achieve their desired outcomes. This study was funded by the Norwegian Program for Development Research and Education (NUFU), and was supervised by Prof. Mulumba Deborah and Prof. Tone Biel.

KEBIRUNGI Harriet (Ms)

Gender responsiveness in provisioning and management of water and sanitation facilities in East African Universities: a case of Makerere University, and University of Dar es Salaam

Ms. Harriet Kebirungi studied gender responsiveness in provisioning and management of water and sanitation facilities in Makerere University and University of Dar es Salaam. Harriet through geospatial tools and perception studies found that provisioning and management of water and sanitation facilities is not gender responsive. This negatively affected male and female students’ access to and utilization of water and sanitation facilities leading to gender inequalities at those Universities. There was also lack of water and sanitation policies at both Universities, therefore water and sanitation facilities were inadequate and toilet designs did not address access and utilization needs of both male and female students. The two Universities need to formulate and implement gender responsive water and sanitation framework and policies. This study was funded by Makerere-Sida Bilateral Research Corporation, and was supervised by Assoc. Prof. Consolata Kabonesa, Prof. Livingstone Luboobi, and Assoc. Prof. Majaliwa Mwanjalolo.

Reintegration of Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA) returnee mothers in the Acholi society: socio-cultural challenges and opportunities

Ms. Emeline Ndossi’s study focused on the reintegration of the Lord’s Resistance Army women who returned from the bush with children without husbands into Acholi society in Northern Uganda. The researcher found out that despite the efforts of Northern Uganda people to receive, cleanse them with rituals, rehabilitate and reunite them with their families, many still experience stigma and resentment due to atrocities committed by the LRA and sexual abuses and forced marital experiences they underwent in LRA which seem to be improper according to traditional Acholi cultural norms. Therefore, they are not fully reintegrated. The researcher suggests that the Acholi should employ especially the collective aspect of their rich culture as a major resource to care, heal and bond these women into the community. The project was self-sponsored and supervised by Assoc. Prof. Wotsuna Khamalwa and Sr. Therese Tinkasiimire.

BANGEREZAKO Haydee (Ms)

Indirect writing and silences in the history of Burundi: official history and woman as mwami

Ms. Haydée Bangerezako dissertation studied the politics of history writing in colonial and postcolonial Burundi. An indirect history emerged from the co-authorship and collaborative form of history writing, in which the colonizer and missionary set the questions while the colonized provided the flesh producing a new official history focussed on kingship. The dissertation aimed to decolonize history by providing a history from below, to counter indirect writing as a history from the top, by studying ordinary women and men in popular oral stories, decentring kingship. Decolonizing history requires studying the production of history, using sources not considered to be conventional to history, considering gender, and how people interact with the past in the present. This study was funded by Carnegie Foundation under the Makerere Institute of Social Research’s (MISR) scholarship, and was supervised by Prof. Mahmood Mamdani

Prophets and subjects of development: slavery, civilization and state formation in Ethiopia

Mr. Ashine Demisse Yonas’ study depicts how modern state developmentalism is connected to ideas of popular social justice in the context of the premodern period. His study inquired how development as a dominant ethos evolved connecting state-society relation in the political history of Ethiopia. The study argued that the major reason that development survived as popular ethos in a context of failed development promises was because development remained a language of the politics of rule and resistance. Hence, the study suggested the key task to achieve development’s promises and dreams, is not to abandon development itself, but to decolonize and democratize the process by taking the community
